Dear Bobby,
I have been in New York for two months. It is a wonderful city. There are lots of huge buildings, museums, lovely parks, bridges, art galleries, traditional restaurants and hotels. I have seen most of them but I haven't seen the Statue of Liberty yet. Yesterday I went to Macy's store and bought you some nice T- shirts there. They were cheap enough.
I haven't had a lot of trouble since I got here, but one day was really terrible. About a week ago, while I was walking through the Central Park, two teenagers stole all my money. I think I should be more careful than before.
Have you heard from dad recently? He hasn't written to me for a few weeks. He sent me his last letter in October. I hope he's okay!
Anyway, take good care of yourself and write me soon!

Love, Katie

Cinderella

Once upon a time, there was a young girl. She was living with her stepmother and her stepsisters. She had to do all the housework alone. Her stepmother and stepsisters didn't help her with the housework. They called her Cinderella because she always wore dirty and old clothes. Cinderella wasn't happy about her life and she was bored with her stepsisters.

One day the prince of the country would like to give a ball because he wanted to marry. He invited all the young girls in the country to the ball. When the ball started, all the girls were at the palace, but Cinderella was at home. While she was crying, a fairy came and made her wishes come true. She could go to the ball. She was wearing a beautiful dress and expensive jewellery when the prince asked her to dance. The prince fell in love with her and they danced until the midnight. She left the palace soon and she dropped one of her shoes at the stairs.

The prince found the shoe and he asked all the young girls in the country to wear the shoe, but no girls in the country could wear the shoe, but Cinderella could wear it. The prince got married to Cinderella and they lived happily ever after.
